Synopsis:

Contemporary dance emerged around the middle of the twentieth century as a mode of dance expression that merges dance elements of both the classical tradition with more modern dance elements. The contemporaneity of the genre often also includes non-western influence, such as those of Africa and Asia. Contemporary dance is expansive and is highly representative of many forms of 20th century art. And dance, as an art form, is a combination of various dimensions: music, performance, physical expression, and visual composition. Understanding contemporary dance is thus a useful way towards understanding much of modern artistic idiom. This course takes a structured approach to approaching the notion of contemporary dance, its provenance and its constituents. It will examine the various sub-genres that make up contemporary dance, including consideration of the stylistic details that make each one a unique craft unto itself.

The course will also expose students to the various cultural traditions out of which contemporary dance has emerged, from West to East.

And finally, in tracking the history of its development, the course will consider the place of contemporary dance within the context of Singapore's artistic landscape.
