Synopsis:

PSI351 Criminological Perspectives in Punishment introduces students to the primary schools of thought within criminology and explores sentencing methodology and post-conviction responses in Singapore. The appropriateness and quality of post-conviction responses as well as their manner of design, delivery and administration have direct bearing on recidivism rates as well as the public perception of justice. It is therefore important for current and aspiring professionals in criminal law practice and/or the design, delivery, administration and evaluation of post-conviction programmes to understand the theories informing the development and administration of post-conviction responses. By taking a deeper look into the art of sentencing and examining judicial rationale and the content of sentencing options from the criminology perspective, this course aims to broaden the understanding and expand the frame of reference of students to better engage constructively with the post-conviction elements of our criminal justice framework.
