Synopsis:

SWK559 Theory and Practice of Gerontological Social Work introduces individual ageing and adaptation to ageing in everyday life. It adopts a biopsychosocial perspective in understanding the impact of ageing on the individual and the family. Physical, cognitive, psychological and social changes and deficits consequent to ageing can complicate coping in the individual and the family. Evaluating the impact of ageing, intervening to mitigate the impact of ageing and enhancing individual and family coping are critical in optimizing the ageing experience. The role of policy and organization of formal help services are discussed and appraised for how they facilitate care for the elderly in Singapore and promote ageing-in-place. The integration of clinical and macro-level knowledge will allow the students comprehensive understanding of the care of the elderly and develop their skills for work in this challenging area.
